Dear Employer:

I am Russell Shomberg. I studied Mechanical Engineering at Boston University before starting a career as an Cryptologic Warfare Officer in the US Navy. After five years, I requested seperation in order to return to engineering. Specifically, I intend to be part of the growing drive towards sustainable public infrastructure. I learned of your company's offer through LKJJKKLJKLJK and believe I would be a good match.

Through the Navy, I have gained experience working both autonomously and in teams. In my role, as an officer, I took imprecise directions and leveraged my resources to quickly produce detailed results. The military expects officers to be constantly completing the next qualification and learning their boss's job. I excelled at this process inside the Navy and have always been seeking new skill sets in my personal life. Please let me know if you feel I lack an specific skills required for your job offer. Likely, I can arrange to learn just about anything.

Please see my attached resume. Additionally, I attached my final Fitness Report written by CAPT Gagnon, the Commanding Officer of my primary command, and a PIM written by CDR Answee, the Commanding Officer who I supported on my final deployment. Unfortunately, classification prevents revealing details from my previous work. I hope these documents provide some clarity into the challenges involved. Otherwise, I will happily answer questions.

I respectfully request you invite me for an interview to discuss my qualifications and our mutual goals. I promise to impress. Currently, I am out of the country and best reached by email, though I can arrange a phone call or video conference if necessary. For more information about me, please take a look at my linkedin profile, my website, or just google my name! I'm happy to answer any questions you may have.

Very respectfully,

Russell J. Shomberg
